European Constitutional Law

Summer term 2025

The European Union is a legally constituted community. This course examines its founding treaties through a constitutional law approach by looking, among others, at the Union's government structure, on its federal dimension, common values, and bases of legitimacy. To what extent can we apply the underlying theoretical models of constitutional law to the primary law of the European Union? To what extent can we speak of European constitutional law? What are the perspectives of this constitutional approach?
