

The Faculty of Cultural Studies at the University of Bremen invites applications for a professorship without tenure track to commence in winter semester 2019/2020 in the field of:

Cultural research with special emphasis on culture in practice and transfer (Public Anthropology)

Ref: P 678/19.

The appointment is subject to the release of funds. The successful candidate will have temporary civil servant status in salary group W2 for the restricted term of five years.

We are looking for an internationally established scholar with broad teaching and research experience as well as visible academic achievements at domestic and international levels. The professorship represents its field in research and teaching, develops it further and contributes to the faculty's international scientific profile.

The professorship in the area of Cultural Research focuses on Public Anthropology with a critical analysis and integration of culture into different practices of knowledge and transfer. The fields of publicly active cultural studies/anthropology encompass the creative industries, media studies, digitalization, film, music, performance and pop culture as expression of a globalized modernity, and interventions in international cooperation in the humanitarian field as well as the co-determination of coexistence in post-migrant, super-diverse societies. The professorship in the area of Cultural Research mediates at the interfaces of academic practice, society and culture via transfer and application processes of knowledge. It encourages students to independently explore different fields and institutions, but also to become active in these fields and institutions themselves.

Research and teaching in the Faculty of Cultural Studies aspires to work at international levels. Interdisciplinary research finds an ideal environment at the University of Bremen, which attaches great importance to internal and external cooperation. The successful applicant will be expected to participate accordingly. The subject area represented by the professorship will be connected to at least one of the Faculty's three research fields: Media change; transculturality and changes in religion; change in education and transfer and knowledge transformation. The successful applicant will teach mainly in the bachelor's program "Cultural Research" and, if appropriate, in the master's program "Transcultural Studies" embedded at the Institute for Anthropology and Cultural Research.

It is expected that the successful candidate will have the ability to deliver courses in the German (and English) language and willingness to participate in the Faculty's self-governing bodies.

The appointee will be an established researcher at both domestic as well as international levels in the fields represented by the professorship. In addition to fulfilling the general requirements for the employment of civil servants, further hiring requirements include a pronounced aptitude for scientific work, proven by an outstanding doctorate in a relevant field and other outstanding post-doctoral qualifications, e.g. in the frame of a junior professorship, habilitation or leadership of a junior research group. Pedagogical aptitude and the willingness to pursue further education in university didactics are expected. The appointment is based on § 18 Bremisches

Hochschulgesetz [Section 18 Bremen Higher Education Act] and Bremisches Beamtengesetz [Section 116 Bremen Civil Servants Act].

The teaching obligation amounts to 9 hours a week per semester in Cultural Studies and Anthropology courses.

The University of Bremen is committed to increasing the number of women in academia. Among others, it has received several awards in the frame of DFG programs on gender equality. Applications from academics with a migration background as well as applications from abroad are expressly welcomed. Priority will be given to applicants with severe disabilities who have essentially the same professional and personal aptitude.
