FACE-IT - Constructive Reporting

Learning how to connect journalism and climate research

Beschreibung:

Description:

The polar ice is melting. This is one of the most shocking facts about global warming. The EU research project FACE-IT, led by marine biologists at the University of Bremen, is looking at how to better manage the consequences of climate change for marine biodiversity, but also for Arctic societies. When it comes to climate change, the media usually pick up on a real problem, but at the same time convey an alarmist end-time crisis scenario. The many approaches to solutions and the people working on solutions fall by the wayside. Constructive journalism counters this media negativism. We want to get to know this journalistic concept and, together with the scientists from FACE-IT in Bremen, find out in practice what possibilities there are for constructive reporting in climate research.

Please note:

In module 7/C.2 attending sessions is obligatory. Students are allowed to miss two sessions unexcused, about further absences the lecturer has to be informed.

This has to do with limited capacities in this module.
