Description:

With a society so fundamentally and deeply mediatised and digital comes big shifts in how we communicate and how we engage with each other and the world. With that comes new ethical dilemmas and structures too. How do we research internet forums and social media? How should anonymity or pseudonymity be treated? Who decides what's ethical in online spaces that cross national, cultural, religious and legal borders? In this seminar, we will consider the implications of mediatisation and digitisation in a number of areas of modern society, including religion, games, journalism, politics and research. How have these areas been shaped by digital society? And how has the digitisation of society been shaped by them?
