

Call for students

Promotion of student research projects

The teaching profile of the University of Bremen is consistently oriented towards research-based learning. Research-based learning as a didactic principle includes activating teaching methods, but also proximity to current research and research processes and their reflection. The mission statement for teaching and learning adopted by the Academic Senate in 2016 formulates our claim to be a "university of Research-Based Learning": research-based learning offers all students the opportunity to develop into responsible and critically thinking personalities with strong professional competence through reflective discourse.

Funds from the Nowetas Foundation can be used to provide financial support for student research projects until June 30, 2021. Accordingly, groups of students can apply for the funds each semester with their own research projects.

- Who is eligible for funding?

The call is addressed to Bachelor and Master students of all subjects who would like to carry out research projects in small groups (at least 2 persons). The responsibility for the project proposal is in the hands of the students; a confirmation is required from the teacher that the project will be supervised. Theses are not eligible for funding.

- What is funded?

Students can apply for funding in kind (max. 1,000 euros) for their own research projects, which are carried out in the context of courses or extracurricular (e.g. consumables, travel expenses).

- What should the application contain?

Names of the applicants
Confirmation of the supervising teacher
Field of study
Type and duration of the research project
Title of the project and a short description (max. 1 DIN A4 page)
Cost calculation

Please send your applications to Christoph Wieselhuber, Teachings and Study Unit, via email: christoph.wieselhuber@vw.uni-bremen.de.

Funding decisions are made at short notice, so applicants can expect a quick response.
